

Susie Winter

Director of Policy and Communications, Publishers Association

Susie began her career as a Press and Broadcasting Officer for the Liberal Democrats. From there, she spent several years at Luther Pendragon as an Associate Director, advising clients on public affairs and media communications. Susie became the first Director General for the Alliance for Intellectual Property in 2006 working to ensure that the importance of IP rights to the UK economy is recognised, and that the legal framework to protect IP rights is upheld and improved, while also promoting awareness of the damage caused to consumers and businesses by IP infringement. She joined the Publishers Association as Director of Policy and Communications in 2014.
